The Virginia Debt.

We quoted Saturday morning from the Baltimore Sun, a paragraph concerning "Virginia and West Virginia Finances," wherein the "neglect of West Virginia to act in the matter of the Virginia State debt," is spoken of in connection with the action of the Virginia Senate in regard to funding the interest on that debt. The Senate proposes, it seems, to provide for but two-thirds of the interest, for the reason that "two-thirds of the debt contracted prior to April 17, 1861, is the portion of the public debt justly chargeable to the State of Virginia, as at present organized, according to the estimate of the Auditor [of Virginia]."

Now, in the first place, there has been no "neglect" on the part of West Virginia in the matter. The proper June term for a settlement has certainly not gone by, if it has yet arrived. It might, indeed, be a question worth considering whether we ought to undertake a settlement with Virginia until her status is definitely settled by Congress. But whatever delay there has been thus far, has arisen, not from this consideration, but simply from the condition of things with which the termination of the rebellion left both parties surrounded. The armies were not disbanded till the summer of 1865. In the following winter, just a few days before the adjournment of our own Legislature, the Legislature of Virginia provided for the appointment of Commissioners, who were instructed to make propositions of remission, and if our Legislature declined, then they were to treat concerning a settlement. A few days after our Legislature adjourned, a copy of the resolutions was received by Governor Boreman from Hon. A. H. H. Stuart, one of the Commissioners under it, who was informed that the Legislature had declined. There has been no session since; but when the Legislature meets next month, we presume the resolutions will be laid before them for consideration. Until then, and until the Legislature has had an opportunity to take concurrent action, there is no ground to speak of "neglect" on the part of West Virginia "in the matter of the Virginia State debt."

In the next place, we cannot conceive how the Auditor of Virginia figures out West Virginia responsible for one-third of that debt. Only two cases of settlement, we believe, have ever been discussed. It is understood that Virginia and her creditors will claim that each State shall pay a share of the debt proportionate to the resources of each. Then we ask, resources of what period? Nobody imagines West Virginia ought to or would settle on the basis of present resources—after Virginia has chosen to bring ruin and bankruptcy on herself in her traitorous assault on the Government—after she has in her rebellion even worn out and run down the railroad to build which this debt was created. The proposition is, we suppose, to take the relative resources of the two States, when the rebellion began, and divide the debt in that proportion. "Resources," in this connection, means, of course, simply and exactly subjects of taxation. A comparison, therefore, of the assessments for 1860 in the counties now composing Virginia, and those in the counties now composing West Virginia, will exhibit precisely the relative ability of the two sections to pay taxes at that time. We take the report of Auditor Bennett, and find the taxes assessed in 1860 within the counties now composing Virginia amounted to $2,622,613.01; while the taxes assessed within the counties now composing West Virginia amounted to $267,595.95. West Virginia's assessment was therefore a little under 10 per cent., or less than one-fifth of the whole. Divided in that proportion, her share of the debt would be not far from ten millions—the annual interest of which would about equal the whole revenue of the State now collected each year.

The whole debt as given to the public by the Richmond authorities, is not far from forty-five millions; but there is reason to believe it is really six or seven millions more, and the fact will be developed in settlement. Suppose we took the third of this debt, already assigned as our share by the Richmond financiers—how could we do with it? How could our people pay a year's interest of $900,000, in addition to present taxation? It is needless to ask how we could hope to reduce the principal and stop the accumulation of that interest.

West Virginia will assume no such burdens, because they do not belong to her. She will settle on no such basis for it is not just; and she has no reason to be more than just to her unnatural mother, who was never even just to her. The Convention of June, 1861, which reorganized the government of Virginia, in the ordinance providing for the formation of West Virginia, thus laid down the basis of adjustment with the old State.

"The new State shall take upon itself a proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia prior to the 1st day of January, 1861, to be ascertained by charging to it all State expenditures and the proportion of the ordinary expenses of the State government, since any part of said debt was contracted, and deducting the amount paid by the treasury of the Commonwealth from the counties included within the said new State during the same period."

There can be no denial that this proposition is rightly equitable. The people of Western Virginia always complained—and justly, that nearly all the expenditures of the State revenue for public works, were made in Eastern Virginia. In addition to this, almost everything for which the debt was contracted, went to the same section. Western Virginia never got back as much as the money paid by her over and above her fair share of the necessary expenses of government, while this enormous debt was piled up for the sole advantage of the east in building lines of public works, which it now appears, were built in contemplation and in aid of the long-plotted rebellion. West Virginia is willing, we believe, to pay an equitable share of all necessary cost of the State Government during the ten years within which this debt was made, and to account for every dollar of public money expended within her limits. She asks then to be treated with her revenues paid into the treasury during the same period; and if she leaves any balance against her, it will be cheerfully assumed and paid. Our sapient friend of the Register has discovered that there will be a balance of fifteen millions the other way. We are glad to hear it; but think our people would have been satisfied with much less.

This is the basis of adjustment laid down by Virginia herself. Nothing could be fairer, and nothing else is fair to our people. We submit for the consideration of our Richmond friends a single and simple proposition. If the present government of Virginia is a government in fact and law, and has any right or authority as such to treat concerning an adjustment of the debt of Virginia, it is by virtue of the reorganization made by the Convention of the people of Virginia, which sat in this city in June and August, 1861. It then follows that all the acts of that Convention are binding upon the present government and people of Virginia. If these gentlemen deny the validity of that reorganization, they affirm their own illegitimacy and consequent incapacity to make any settlement. If they affirm its validity, they admit the obligation to make this settlement on the basis which we claim. And if Mr. Auditor Taylor can show that on this basis West Virginia must assume one-third of the debt of Virginia, we shall be glad to see the figures.

WEST VIRGINIA ITEMS.

Completion of the Laurel Fork and Sand Hill Railroad.

The Parkersburg Times, of Saturday, publishes a communication without date, which says:

"The first train over the 'Laurel Fork and Sand Hill Railroad,' was run to-day. Its terminus is at the platform of the Andrews' Well, belonging to the Farmers' Oil Company, and in the immediate vicinity of all their lands. This company has some three or four thousand barrels of oil awaiting shipment by this road."

JUDGE E. B. HALL.—This gentleman, who many friends will be glad to learn, has sufficiently recovered his health to resume his duties on the bench.

GRAND LODGE OF GOOD TEMPLARS.—We clip from Saturday's Fairmont Feltre:

A convention to institute a Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Good Templars for West Virginia, composed of delegates from the various Lodges in the State, met at the M. J. Church in this place, on Tuesday last, at 11 o'clock, A. M. J. J. Spencer, Right Worshipful Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of North America, being deputed by said Lodge to organize a Grand Lodge for West Virginia, called the convention to order.
